The Todo family enjoyed the full trust of the shogunate government for over 200 years, from the time when Takatora Todo, Tozama-daimyo, entered the government in Tsu (current Tsu City, Mie Prefecture) until the end of the Edo era. After the Meiji Restoration, Takayasu Todo, Jodaigaro (a chief counselor of a castle when the feudal lord is away) of the Tsu domain who served as a commander in the Boshin War in 1868, became the Bank's first president.

Ise merchants joined the management of the Bank. Shirobe Kawakita became the fifth president in 1894. * The Kawakita family, a merchant family from Ise, a community famous for its business acumen, helped save the Bank from immediate risk of being taken over. With the Kawakita family's abundant management know-how and expertise, the Bank established a solid foundation of sound management practices.

HYAKUGO Episode 2

Safety first at Hyakugo Bank

"Safety first at Hyakugo Bank," is a phrase Kyudayu Kawakita, also known as Handeishi, the sixth president (1919-1945) of the Bank frequently quoted. It means that deposits are money we are temporarily holding for customers, so it is only natural to manage them in a way that they can be returned at any time. Since then, the Bank has always strived for our "solid management" policy.
